

The fragrance is inspired by the brand's notion of private luxury.

Message in a Bottle

When Your Own Initials Are Enough." Bottega Veneta's decades-old tag line still rings true for Tomas Maier as he debuts the label's first-ever women's fragrance. The leathery, floral chypre—with Italian bergamot, Brazilian pink peppercorn, Indian Sambac jasmine, oak moss and Indian patchouli—strikes the same sensual notes as the brand's supple leather bags. The blend is then beautifully packaged in a weighty, curved flacon inspired by the glass blowers in Murano who create the Bottega Veneta home collection bottles. A body cream, lotion and shower gel complete the line. As Maier puts it, "Fragrance is an accessory that becomes the signature of the woman who wears it." From $95, Neiman Marcus; $475 for a limited-edition Murano-glass bottle available exclusively at Bottega Veneta boutiques; bottegabeneta.com.

PUCKER UP
From Ginger Snap to Honey Bunny, eight shades of Lipclicks by Mark. give your pout subtle color and high shine.

$10 each,
meetmark.com.

RIGHT Backstage at Giorgio Armani. BELOW Jerome Molles customizes color by combining traditional foiling with balayage techniques.

SAN FRANCISCO

Hair Say

Seasonal tips from color expert Jerome Molles

GO DARKER From rich browns to beautiful reds, fall shades should be more subdued—as seen on the Armani and Versace runways—rather than flashy. BE GENTLE When your hair is wet, don't dry it vigorously. Squeeze the water out to avoid friction. STAY SAFE Sulfate-free shampoo and conditioner will help keep the integrity of tresses and protect any hue. Molles suggests: Rahua. Marzia's Salon, 166 Geary St., 13th Fl., S.F., 415-392-2441.